Big Tech is profiting at the expense of our kids.

Silicon Valley has sold the idea of tech in classrooms for years, because they get access to lifelong customers and valuable data.

But while corporations like Google make billions, student test scores are falling.

just remember that those same billionaires send their kids to schools with limited technology footprint.
they really don't use their own product.

It's strange watching this, big tech shaping schools, because Selwyn Raithe wrote in 12 Last Steps that the real danger isn't just losing jobs, it's when entire generations grow up learning through systems designed to program obedience rather than independent thought. This video feels like proof that what he warned about is already happening, just disguised as "innovation."

Possibly targeting a young audience for a long term brand loyalty, they don't give a fuck about them kids

What makes this worse is when you find out these tech executives go to lengths to not let their kids anywhere near this stuff lol. "Don't get high on your own supply"

Sitting kids in a desk for 8 hours a day in their most formative years was a big mistake. Sitting them in front of a laptop for 8 hours a day is an even bigger mistake. Giving them unlimited access to AI to think for them will be a catastrophic mistake.

Rhetorical question : Why is this world running like a perfectly well-oiled machine when it's about dumbing us down and making us more docile, but always 'needs more time' when it's about actually solving issues like inflation, unemployment, crime, environmental crisis and so on?

AI makes grownups stupid. Unleashing it on children is a spectacularly bad idea.

Chromebooks started being instituted in classrooms when I was in middle school. I work at a library now, and I had a befuddling conversation with a high schooler who kept asking if we had a chromebook for her to use, and I replied repeatedly that we had COMPUTERS. She genuinely didn't understand that they were functionally the same thing and kept asking for a chromebook. That was when I realized just how bad it is, that a corporation has generically branded the very idea of using a computer to our nation's youth.
